

Kiel, 29. April 2019

MIT Technology Review: The desperate race to cool the ocean before it's too late

"Instead the researchers homed in on the idea of marine cloud brightening—a form of solar geoengineering, in that it increases the planet's reflectivity. Spraying tiny salt particles from seawater up into the low layer of clouds that blankets much of the ocean's surface would form cloud micro-droplets."

LINK

Linked to: marine geo-engineering , Solar Radiation Management

0 Comments

Add a comment

You need to be logged in to add comments.