

Kiel, 04. February 2019

Phys.org: Carbon capture and conversion must not rely on rare metals

"Last year, humans emitted approximately 37 billion tonnes of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere – a disastrous and unsustainable figure. To avoid the worst effects of climate change we could capture some of that carbon as it is released by power plants and store it permanently below ground. Better still, some of that waste carbon dioxide could be converted into useful chemicals or fuel."

LINK

Linked to: Carbon Dioxid Removal

0 Comments

Add a comment

You need to be logged in to add comments.